

The Web has many resources for teacher mentors, developing mentor programs, and providing support to new teachers. Listed below are a few resources that the OPI is aware of at the time of publication that provide various teacher mentor resources.

- The New Teacher Center

<http://www.newteachercenter.org/>

The New Teacher Center in Santa Cruz, California, has many mentor resources and articles. California requires mentoring for new teachers, and the Center was developed to provide support for the initiative.

- Mira Via

<http://www.miravia.com/>

This is the Web site of Laura Lipton and Bruce Wellman who authored Mentoring Matters. The site has a free study guide that works in collaboration with the book.

- The National Staff Development Council (NSDC)

<http://www.nsdcc.org>

This organization has written many articles on mentoring. Search the Web site using the key word “mentor” to find multiple articles on mentoring.

- The Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development (ASCD)

<http://www.ascd.org>

This organization has many resources on mentoring. The theme for the May 2005 Education Leadership Journal was “Supporting New Teachers.” This journal is published by ASCD.

- The Mentoring Leadership and Resources Network

<http://www.mentors.net/>

The network provides articles on mentoring best practices and some program models.
